

The Three Groups

As far as I can see, (and it's only as far as I can see), there seem to be three categories', types, or groups of people, which I am going to call Group A, Group B and Group C. Of course I am generalising and have no wish to stereotype any one individual. I merely make an observation, of the different ways people live, that seem to fall in to three categories.

Group A - The Careless
Group B - The Carers
Group C - The Carefree

Group A.

The careless. This group I think is recognised by many as the so called 'bad' people. Of course they are not bad for no one is bad for God is not bad, and all men, women and children are created in the image and likeness of God. Bad behaviour maybe, but the root of the person cannot be bad, unless of course you believe there is a god, but that this god is evil and the image and likeness of God is bad, then I guess there is little hope.

So this group is the careless -the I don't care mentality. The I'm all right Jack brigade. The to hell with you, I'm more concerned about me and mine. They seem to have no respect for their fellow man, for their fellow man's property, for authority, and even for themselves. We have all met people like this, and if we are to pray for our fellow man, then this group is probably the most needy of our prayers. That they may be transformed from being careless to being carefree. But the important thing that is observed about this group by most, is that they seem to sail through life with their careless attitude, and nothing seems to touch them. They may in a lot of cases be the 'have-nots' of this world, but that makes no difference, for when you are careless, you are free to just take, because you actually don't care.

Group B.

The carers. This group seems to be in the worst position of all the three groups. This group do care. This group care so much they are not only doing their best to be decent law abiding citizens and live their lives as purely and as honestly as they can, but they also see it as their responsibility to protect their fellow man, and indeed the planet. This group because of their care are trying to eradicate all kinds of evil from the planet, so that they can create a good and peaceful world for everyone to live in. Their sentiment seems very honourable, and this group of people seem to be the most respected in their communities. This group do not sail through life without a care, because they do care. This is the group that seem to get the "uh oh', it's all turned pear shaped again" syndrome. This is the group that when something ill befalls them, seem to get themselves surrounded by Job's comforters who say, "This isn't fair, and she/he is such a good person as well, it doesn't happen to that lot (Group A), it just isn't fair that it should happen to her/him, she/he does not deserve it". The other problem this group seem to suffer is one of judgement. Because they see themselves as caring, and are carers, when they see somebody holding lower values than themselves, they look down their nose, as if that person were a lesser mortal. "I can do it, why don't you", might be what they would say to one of those from Group A, without any knowledge whatsoever of the person, or what that person has suffered to bring him/her to where they are. Of those in Group C, they would probably judge them as irresponsible, and may find it difficult to recognise the difference between care-freedom from carelessness. This is the group that seek for peace, but it seems to evade them. It would seem for them, that to seek for peace is to be alluded by it. Their hearts cry at the end of the day is usually, "And after all I've done", etc. Therefore this group too is needy of our prayers, that they may have their terrible burden of self-responsibility removed from them that they may join Group C.

Group C.

The carefree. This group it would seem is in the best position of the three groups. Because they are carefree, they are free to care. They do not have to 'try' to care, they just spontaneously do. They are probably not even aware that they are caring. They can see where Group A is coming from and also where Group B are coming from, and are in a position to care for both groups. This group like Group A seem to sail through life, yet should something befall them, they seem to rise above it. They seem to be care free of the situation. This group like group A also say "I'm alright Jack", but their alrightness does not come from their ego. Their alrightness comes from a deep understanding of themselves within, so much so, that because they are able to accept themselves, just as they are, with all their warts and bumps they are able to do the self same for their fellow man. This is the group, that unlike Group A, would say the opposite, "To hell with me and mine, I'm for them".

I know which group I would prefer to be in. What say you?

I am sure however this question must arise, "yes but - how does one become carefree"? To which the answer is the reverse, you will be carefree when you become ONE. That is why it is written - seek and you will find.

Find what?

Yourself, your True and Real SELF.
