

EMBRACING THE DARKNESS AS WELL AS THE LIGHT...

We are in this flesh and blood body for the purpose of the pleasure of the senses. This is a difficult word for many. Evil like beauty is in the eye of the beholder. As Shakespeare wrote... "Nothing is evil but thinking makes it so." The day will come when every man-woman- boy and girl, will have the freedom in their heart to do anything and to enjoy anything, as long as what they do does not harm another. A lot of what they will be free to enjoy, society calls evil today.

When humanity lives by this code of the heart, it is then the dark energy will have lost a significant foothold on the earth for we will then have stopped resisting what the dual mind now sees as evil and embraced both the light and the darkness having the presence of Mind to see beyond the veil of illusions to create an all new consciousness. This will be the consciousness that prevails and also creates the new earth. There are angels who consider man with an envious curiosity.

The One we all were before creation desired all the experience that becoming flesh would offer. We as the One, desired to know all the experiences of flesh. We have been programmed to good and evil. We as the prodigal son have taken it upon ourselves to say this is good, that is evil, this is right, and that is wrong. In the higher scheme of things this was the plan, and there is more than one way of perceiving reality. This "knowledge of good and evil" creates the contrast that is responsible for our expansion.

To see this is to begin to embrace the darkness as well as the light. Somewhere in scripture, I think it's in Isaiah, God says that light and darkness are all the same to him. I'll stop here. Here's something to think about... it is written in first John... God is Light and in him is no darkness at all" if God is all there is... what's this thing about called darkness? If he is Omnipresence, where is this thing called evil? Could it just possibly... maybe... be limited to the mind of dreaming man? If he is all encompassing Love the only place where anything else could thrive would be in the dream of Adam who has yet to be awakened from his slumber.
