

PERCEPTION DETERMINES ACTION...

I'm thinking of something Paul is quoted as saying in 1st cor. "if any man be in Christ he is a new creation. Old things have passed away, behold, all is become new". When you pass into Christ, and all has become new, you are then a new creation and as Paul wrote, "old things have passed away". I've a question... if old things really have passed away and I have really become a new creation; can this new creation, man sin?

In johns 1st epistle he says... "He that is born again cannot sin"...

Perception determines action...

The reason why this world is the way it is, is because of mans perception. In my post, when speaking of that which the dual mind sees as evil, I said that the end justifies the means, and that if this were true, then this that man sees as evil is a "God thing". If the end really does justify the means, then at the end of the day, the means is no longer evil.

Your question was,

"So are you saying there is really no such thing as sin or unrighteousness after all? And that it is just a figment of the flesh's imagination?"

I'm saying that

Sin as we have been taught never existed. The word translated "sin" in the scriptures is Miss. Man was to be God's expression. When he fails to be that as the result of the dual mind that sees good and evil, he misses the mark which is again, to be God's expression on the earth. If every man saw with the single eye, then they would see only God having the heart purified from double vision. The result would
